family. Rest of body and of mind become not only easy in such a frame of part.

The Church requires of all attendance upon mass except under circumstances necessarily prevent it, participation also in other exercises. The Church, for the same reasons, and that included in the proper observance of Sunday may be promoted, members engaging in services except so far as circumstances render it necessary. But the Church does not forbid nor prohibit other employments which do not in themselves, and which are necessary to really rest the body and mind. Thus the idea of Sunday as a holy day and also as a day fully preserved and of effect.

...ies where Sunday is thus rather was thus observed, an incidental yet greater benefit gained. Even those who, in the absence either of religious and devotion, or of the obedience to the precepts of the Church, failed to observe Sunday were yet under less temptation to do so openly and defiantly than were innocent means of in which the whole people sufficient to occupy and satisfy without their resorting to disorderly violations of the day. This was the case, for many years, throughout the continent of Europe.
During a day on which the part of the population went to church and assisted at religious services (even at hours too early for to observe them), the rest of the day was spent in quietly and innocent enjoy-
